The aerial hostelry was discovered by Police Magistrate Olmsted, sitting in the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday. It was brought out through the fact that Henry McGarvie, one of the managers of the Madison Square Roof Garden, was charged with selling ten glasses of beer to Detective Tompkins of the Tenderloin precinct.

Tomkins went out and captured McGarvie McGarvie of the liquor laws.

In court he led him in triumph before the complaint clerk. "Here's a man selling beer on Sunday," he said, "without having any hotel. He has the sandwiches all right, but no hotel."

Jackson is a freight engineer and had mearly finished his homeward trip when overtaken by the storm. It travelled in the same direction in which he was going, and in a spirit of dare-devilitry he attempted to beat it home. The elements evidently took umbrage at his temerity, and a bolt of lightning struck the track behind him. The race, which had begun in jesting recklessness, developed into a run for life.

A flery ball followed the rails in the wake of the flying train, seemingly in no hurry
